E-communication from Lincoln Financial Group

A message from Bob Reiff

The increasing emotional consequences and work impacts of mental health-related disabilities in the workplace offer an opportunity for employers to rethink the ways they can help employees in need. With this in mind, this week I'm sharing new resources to encourage employee well-being.

Last week, we hosted broker partners and employers for our quarterly Lincoln Absence Advisor webinar, A new focus: Mental health, disability and the whole employee, where Dr. David Berube, our chief medical officer, and Dr. Glenn Pransky, scientific advisor to Lincoln Financial, shared considerations for employer solutions to minimize absenteeism and maximize productivity and retention.

If you weren't able to join us, we invite you to view the webinar recording, or listen to a recent podcast episode about the Autonomy Paradox in remote work, which explores the stress and complexities of telework.

Please continue to engage your Lincoln sales or service contact for support, and I look forward to touching base again soon.
